WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11.—Twenty-four amateur radio stations are listed at Hammond in a report revised and brought up to date today by the Federal Communications commission for the benefit of communities which may be stricken by a calamity that cuts off other communication facilities.

These 24 at Hammond are a part of an army of 20,000 stations whose operators give their time and spend their own money to be ready to serve in emergencies such as the recent California flood, the Ohio valley flood of over a year ago and many other such disasters.

Perform Service

The list is kept on file in Washington make the facilities at all hours available to the American Red Cross, the war department, police and other governmental agencies.

Before a license is granted, a pledge is given not to commercialize the facilities in any way. Operators are given wide discretion, however, in what they send and thus from day to day perform a neighborly service for persons who have friends in far off places.
